

Raymond E. Ozzie

Recent career

Mr. Ozzie founded and currently serves as the Chief Executive Officer of Blues Wireless Inc., a provider of integrated hardware, software, and services for cellular IoT communications. Mr. Ozzie served as Chief Software Architect and Chief Technical Officer of Microsoft Corporation from 2005 until December 2010, having created Microsoft Azure and having played a key role in Microsoft's transformation from PC software to being a services-centric company. Mr. Ozzie joined Microsoft in 2005 after it acquired Groove Networks, Inc., a collaboration software company that he founded in 1997.

Committee membership: Technology (chair)

HPE director since: 2015

Public directorships

None

Impact

As a serial entrepreneur, tech veteran, and the creator of Lotus Notes, Mr. Ozzie is widely recognized as an influential technology expert with a thorough understanding of both business strategy and the software industry. Combined with his experience as an executive in some of the largest multinational technology companies, such as Microsoft, and as an entrepreneur, Mr. Ozzie's variety of perspectives and seasoned operational leadership have proven invaluable assets to the Board's ability to identify and execute on a sound business and technological strategy.

Skills and qualifications

- Business development and strategy
- Business ethics
- Executive level leadership
- Extensive industry leadership
- Growth and transformation
- Technological innovation